The Tale of the Princess May

THE story of the search for the Princess May would be a mercantile romance in itself. It would tell of a high resolve to find a certain combination of virtues; of a twenty years' search; of journeyings and trials and disappointments; of hope deferred and faith unshaken, and of how, after many years, we finally discovered the Princess May, and made her triumphantly our own.

The mercantile element, however, would spoil the romance in spots. For instance, it would be necessary to tell of our expenditures, and (to drop the allegory) how an order for $115,000 worth turned a $1.50 glove into a dollar one.

This wonderful glove is made in Grenoble, France,—the great glove-making centre of the world. It is given expert attention and the highest care, from the selecting of the skins which make it, to the final stitch. It comes direct to our counters from the best glove-maker in all Grenoble, free from all the usual charges of unpacking, repacking, reshipping and divers commissions.

This makes a story of reduced prices on Grenadines as interesting as it is inexplicable. We make some very material concessions from the prices of yesterday. Don't ask us for reasons. You'll not find them in the goods, either,—they are emphatically excellent. They are all black.
